Hypothetical performance results, if shown, (e.g., quantitative backtests) have many inherent limitations. No representation is being made that any fund or account will or is likely to achieve profit or loss. In fact, there are frequently sharp differences between hypothetical performance results and the actual results subsequently realized by any particular trading program. One of the limitations of hypothetical performance results is that they are generally prepared with the benefit of hindsight. In addition, hypothetical trading does not involve financial risk, and no hypothetical trading record can completely account for the impact of financial risk in actual trading. For example, the ability to withstand losses or adhere to a particular trading program in spite of trading losses are material points which can adversely affect actual trading results. The hypothetical performance, if shown, represents the application of the quantitative models as currently in effect on the date first shown, and there can be no assurance that the models will remain the same in the future, or that an application of the current models in the future will produce similar results, because the relevant market and economic conditions that prevailed during the hypothetical performance period will not necessarily recur. There are numerous other factors related to the markets in general or to the implementation of any specific trading program which cannot be fully accounted for in the preparation of hypothetical performance results, all of which can adversely affect actual trading results. All hypothetical performance results are presented for illustrative purposes only.

Historical performance results for investment indices and/or categories are provided for general comparison purposes only and generally do not reflect the deduction of transaction and/or custodial charges, the deduction of an investment management fee, nor the impact of taxes, the incurrence of which would have the effect of decreasing historical performance results.
